

Union raises concerns over surveillance of care workers

 U.K.

Public services union UNISON has highlighted the case of care workers employed by the national charity Community Integrated Care who are being subjected to excessive surveillance. Staff have to sign-in on an hourly basis with their photos being taken and their identity also being checked with finger prints. The workers argue that the process actually hampers their ability to deliver proper care to clients. UNISON is also concerned that the company's use of biometric data without personal consent might infringe new data protection rules.

Unison

epsucob

2018 June epsucob@NEWS 11

- Printer-friendly version

Policies

Digitalisation

Social Services