EPSU appeals the judgement of the EU General Court

(16 January 2020) EPSU's Executive Committee decided to appeal the decision of the EU General Court of 24 October last.

The Court rejected the demand of EPSU to annul the European Commission's refusal to bring a social partner agreement forward to the Council.

This agreement when and if adopted by qualified-majority voting in Council as a Directive would give nearly 10 million civil servants and workers in central government the same EU legal protection on information and consultation rights as other workers have.

As things stand today, central government workers are excluded from existing EU Directives setting out minimum standards on fundamental workers' rights to be informed and consulted on changes that are of direct concern to them such as job cuts or digitalisation.

The Commission has not plugged this gap for the last 10 years, despite <a href="the-burger: the-burger: Law, the-burger: the-b

Essentially, the case centers on the interpretation of the Treaty articles (articles 154-155) that provide for agreements between European employers and trade unions' organisations to become generally binding through a Council decision.

The Commission has argued before the Court that it holds full discretion to judge the content as well as to decide if it is politically appropriate to bring such social partner agreements to the Council.

This undermines the autonomy of the social partners to freely negotiate and to use the rules of the Treaty to ask the Council for a decision.

At stake is the process according to which the social partners play a special role, as provided for by the European Treaties, in the European integration and in regulating the labour market.

While the General Court found shortcomings in the way the Commission had handled the agreement, it nonetheless ruled in favour of the Commission's unprecedented position. According to the Court, the Commission does not have to act in transparency based on a set of clear and predictable criteria and processes. There is a breach of confidence in the working of this institution. This cannot be left unchallenged

- Log in to post comments
- Printer-friendly version

Policies
Central government
Information & consultation

Social Dialogue
Sectors
National and Europ

National and European Administration

Other organizations

EC