

Unions mobilise psychologists over pay, jobs and contracts

 France

A national strike and local demonstrations by psychologists took place on 28 September following earlier action in June. The workers' trade unions have a range of demands related to pay, jobs and the statutory/contractual position of psychologists and government proposals on their status, independence and payment for consultations. Psychologists have seen demands for their services increase significantly during the pandemic and the unions argue that this needs to be recognised in terms of more jobs, better employment conditions and similar pay improvements as awarded to other health and social care workers.
